The strong growth in demand for portable consumer electronics has caused a tremendous growth in the global thermally conductive silicone elastomers market. Thermally conductive silicone elastomers are highly demanded for the use in energy saving electronic products, e.g., devices used in computers and smartphones which require elastomers to insulate the products from outside heat. Thermal conductivity is the measure of the rate of heat transfer through a material and is expressed in W/m-Kelvin.

Thermal insulation materials with low thermal conductivity are used to heat or cool electronics devices. With an increasing demand for portable consumer electronic devices, the demand for low thermal conductivity

A: A product key is different from the license key, and as FFF says it's just a letter and a number. The product key refers to the registry key mentioned by @Greg, which in turn refers to the EA games keygen software. You don't need the EA keygen to play SimCity. In fact it's a common misconception that you need it in order to play SimCity - you only need a valid EA Origin account that's linked to your EA Games account. You can read more about them here: What is an Origin Game Key and Product Key? The present invention relates to a curling iron comprising at least one guide rod for guiding a magnetic field which is produced by permanent magnets. Curling irons have become extremely popular of late. They are used by a large number of people for household use. It is known to provide curling irons with permanent magnets for producing the magnetic field. Typically, this involves providing a body formed with an open groove which is closed by a rear wall having the same thickness as the body. Permanent magnets are inserted in the body and a front facing closing wall is pressed onto the groove, so that the permanent magnets close the groove and in the process completely shield an inner surface of the body from the view of the user. The user carries out the actual ironing process by pressing the front closing wall on the body. This method of producing a curling iron is a functional solution. The disadvantages are of course that the body is comparatively large, so that there is only a small space available for the magnets. The magnets have only a low power and therefore cause a low magnetic field. The user must be careful that he does not place his fingers, which may not be readily protected from possible burns, near the surface with the magnets. Curling irons of this construction are also expensive to produce. According to the present invention, the object is to provide a curling iron which is comparatively small, so that there is a large available space for the magnets, and also a curling iron which can be produced at a low cost. This object is achieved in a curling iron which comprises a body formed with a recess extending therethrough. A first and a second closing wall are located to close the recess. Magnet means are positioned in the recess, and at least one of the first and the second closing walls comprises a magnetic material and is adjacent to a magnetic field of the magnet means, so that a surface which is visible to the user is
