the trial court denied the defendant's request for a mistrial, the defendant cannot gain a reversal on appeal when he was not granted his mistrial motion. Since we have found the defendant's right to a new trial was not properly vindicated, we turn to the State's assignment of error which is that the trial court erred in permitting the defendant to be discharged from custody as a condition of bail.[1] The State correctly contends that while the court may grant the defendant a conditional release from jail as a condition of bail, it cannot impose the condition to be released on the payment of a fixed sum as was done here. The following occurred at the hearing: "BY MR. RIGGS: "I think if the Court please, he has been in jail since the time we were together this morning. He's been denied bail. I would ask that he be released. I believe he is a good enough risk to be out of jail. I have two friends who are in jail who I trust to be out. Now I feel he can be out. "BY THE COURT: "Okay, you may be dismissed from the presence of the jury. ".... "BY MR. RIGGS: "If the Court please, I've got an absolute duty to the jurors, as well as to the State. I would suggest, I believe he is a good enough risk that the judge could set a bond amount and he could be out without—at that point—And that—at that point and time, I am not going to agree to that. I would agree to that at the time the bail bond was set, which is—"BY THE COURT: "All right, let the record reflect what you said. We will recess." As a general rule the sheriff cannot detain a defendant after an arrest on a valid warrant or on an arrest without a warrant. State v. Malin, 340 So.2d 1006 (La.1976); State v. Dain, 319 So.2d 654 (La.1975); State v. Hayes, 322 So.2d 197 (La.1975); State v. Johnson, 308 So.2d 54 (La. 1975). If, however 0cc13bf012

Genetic perturbation of the arcA/spy sensor: a novel method to define cell envelope stress responses in Streptococcus pneumoniae. Cell envelope stress responses are important components of the adaptation of bacteria to changing environments. The Spx transcriptional regulator, which is involved in the synthesis of thiol-disulfide exchange proteins, is a well-characterized master regulator of these responses. Recently, the target of Spx action was shown to be the fabR transcriptional regulator, which is involved in the stress response to R-factors. However, both the environmental conditions that activate the fabR regulator and the mechanism(s) that link fabR expression to changes in the cell envelope remain poorly understood. Here, we show that the H2A histone gene is specifically co-regulated by both Spx and fabR and by other R-factor sensing systems, including Clp, DegS, and RcsCD, but not Phr. Mutations in fabA, a known target of Spx, did not alter fabR expression or fabR-dependent H2A-1 or H2A-2 repression. The failure to show a positive regulatory link between Spx and fabA may be due to the function of Spx in repressing transcription of several genes not reported here, including some coding for biosynthesis enzymes, the transcriptional activator creC, and the RcsC/RcsD two-component regulatory system. However, Spx was sufficient to repress transcription of rRNA and rplL, and in strains with compromised Spx activity, a decline in transcription of rRNA and rplL was observed after exposure to R-factor moeB. Thus, in addition to the fabR R-factor response system, Spx appears to be involved in the general stress response to envelope-

Q: How to tell when a MongoDB node has completely successfully shutdown? We are using MongoDB Atlas (on Google Cloud Platform) in order to run sharded clusters. There are some problems when moving across regions, e.g. when switching to another region. In order to get the new connection to startup correctly, the mongos processes have to be killed, so that the cluster is not made up of different shards and shards do not use the wrong config files. My question: how can I find out when a node in MongoDB has successfully shut down? The mechanism I am using right now is sending the shutdown request to the mongos process using the shutdown command (e.g. `db.adminCommand({"shutdown" : 1});`). This way, MongoDB actually tells you to using the `node.status()`
