Taxonomy Cephator was first named by Thomas Henry Huxley in 1859 and the type species is Cephator mantellensis. In 1876, Othniel Charles Marsh named a second species Cephator coevus. In 1923, Isbrand G. Meyer assigned C. mantellensis and C. coevus to the genus Orthippus. In 2012, David Grimaldi, who was aware of the nomen nudum, proposed that both species be assigned to a new genus of their own, Cephator. The type species is C. mantellensis. C. coevus is the only species assigned to the genus. Morphology Like other brontotheres, Cephator was an herbivore that ate conifer leaves and, occasionally, pine nuts. The species is
