Apologies for the inconvenience.Q: Xsockets and C# We're looking into Xsockets and would like to know if there is a way to access a web application from an.exe. A: I haven't used it personally, but you should be able to do this by using a WebServer from the .Net Framework 3.5. Xsockets Server is a .Net library but you can access it from .Net 2.0. I did see this blog posting about it but haven't tested it myself. Q: Was Batman's group of Robin they met in that episode related to the new Batman trilogy? While watching Batman - The Animated Series recently I was interested to see a few images of Batman in that episode in the "Batcave" he meets with some "Robin" kids. This "Robin" looked similar to the "Robin" from the new Batman movie. Intro to Hanwell, more parts soon...Q: How to get random xaml names for objects in a XAML object collection I have the following code: Window Window1 { Name = "Hello" BorderBrush = SomeBrush Title = "Hello" } Window Window2 { Name = "World" BorderBrush = SomeOtherBrush Title = "World" } This is inside a XAML object collection: What I want to do is randomly pick a number of windows and name them according to the XAML object collection for that number. For instance, I want to have 3 random windows of type Window2 with a random title for each. A: You can use the code below to create any number of ContentControls in a random order. The problem is that the order in which you add the ContentControls to your contentPresenter is random and it will not be stable over time or after you close and reopen the app. So this will not always produce the random order you want. To fix this, you need to store the ContentControls somewhere so that the position and ordering will not be random. Assuming there is a List named window2Controls, then you can use this code below to create any number of random windows. First, we will create a variable with all the window2Controls. List window2Controls = new List();

What's new in Tiger Fighter 1931 Sunset MP048:

I am looking for feedback on a mod I made of the Tiger FTB 1931, I think it's worth pointing out that I am only 16, and that fact really helps me finish models. Any feedback is appreciated and helps me learn. I am very willing to improve it if you have suggestions. I made this model for a contest a while back, and I finally got around to making a video for it. Hope yall like it, UPDATE: I'm building a new model at the moment. Check out the video here: Here are some stats: Scale: 1:48 Size - 2.6240 Weight - 110.8g (uncased) Smooth, Textured and Silenced. The scale is 1:48, the "S" was made with minites, pretty sure it is. My forum thread for this can be found here: It took about 8 months of work. I started at March 16th last year, and I submitted it by December 2nd. It was my first entry, it was scored 11th, it finished 8th. Can't take that away :P Idk who it won to, but that is cool with me, getting that much feedback means a lot and I'm glad that it won. I had mostly my friends judge it. Also, the creator of the contest who judged the contest, drew it. First off, it took a long time to make. I made it around when I was 14 or 15, and I remade it for the purpose of showing off to my friends and getting feedback. It took a while because I didn't have the knowledge at that time, and that's alright. When I found the model I really liked, I set out to make it and make it beautiful, which as I said takes a little longer. The arms and legs are polybashed. Also, the arms and legs are defaulted to white weights. Spears, machine guns and blowtorches can be easily added. Some posing would be nice. Other then, I think that
