The invention further relates to an apparatus for the separation of oil, in particular fuel oil, from a fuel oil/water mixture which comprises oil, in particular fuel oil, and water, comprising a supply container for oil, in particular fuel oil, and a supply container for water, which containers are separated by means of a pipe, a separation container in which a washing water/oil mixture is formed from the oil and water supplied by the pipe, and a separation tank in which the oil and washing water mixture is separated into oil and washing water. The invention furthermore relates to a separation tank for carrying out the process. It is known to separate fuel oil from a fuel oil/water mixture by dewatering, i.e. drying, in order to form a cake which can be used as a fuel. This is carried out for example on a rotatable drum over which the
