I tried to cross the street, but it was crowded, there were people everywhere. "Why didn't you try to run for it?" Mr. Baskin asked. I was still wearing the hat. "Everyone was staring at me!" I said. "You were a little hat," Mr. Baskin pointed out. I do not know why, but I was angry at Mr. Baskin, and I was angry at the other people. They just weren't helping matters, with their staring and their whisperings. "Go back to bed! I'll wake you up in the morning!" I thought. "I'll go back to bed," I agreed, trailing him back to the bed. He slipped in, turned over, and pulled his knees to his chest. I stood up, noticed that my hat was on the floor, and felt guilty. Without warning, I fell down in front of him and put my arms around his shoulders. He shuddered, which made me shudder a little, I thought. I buried my head against his chest. "I like when you do that," he said. "It's cold on the bed," I said. He smiled. "Would it be all right if we did that, for a little while?" I asked. "I like it when you smile," I confessed. He pulled me up so that we were face to face. "It's cold, but," he began, leaning toward me. I put my finger on his lips, and then my arms wound around his neck. We sat there for what seemed like hours. Time passed. He sighed and lay down, leaving me alone in the dark. I had a sudden, overwhelming urge to look in the mirror again. I was amazed at what I saw. I couldn't believe that I was there, that I wasn't dreaming, that I was a person and my name was Eleanor Austen. I rubbed my eyes, and patted my hair for its thinness. My head ached, and I had a terrible, awful

Rate Topic Sticker Added My post has been viewed 1,547 times Pages Saturday, January 28, 2013 Putting the Stress of Life into Perspective I can't even tell you what sparked this post. But here goes. I've been thinking about blessings lately. Not the literal kind, but rather blessings I've been given in my life. Living in a time of birth, who wouldn't think about blessings. But, I've been thinking about blessings in ways I hadn't before. My Christmas season was filled with blessings. My family, friends, co-workers, and pastors gave me so much more than gifts. They gave me their love and filled my heart with hope and promise. I am so grateful for my wonderful family and friends. You see, one of my favorite things I've been given in my life is perspective. This is a piece I wrote that touches on this topic. It's a topic that I feel I need to keep reminding myself of. "Put it in perspective...It is better to have been loved and lost than never to have been loved at all." About Me I'm not perfect. I get a few things wrong and a few other things right, but I'll let you know when I get something wrong. I'm a wife and Mom, and I have a day job. I am a sinner saved by grace. I love to sing and hope to share this love with others through music. I love to make food for my family. My family loves good food and I love to cook for them and make sure we have a decent dinner everyday. I am a daughter of God and I love him so very much. Because of this, I have a humble and great respect for what he has done in my life. I find joy in "all things" and try to be as appreciative of each day as I can be. But, I also have a pretty goofy side, so I suppose I could be called an optimist with a sprinkle of sarcasm. It's important to me to be honest about my shortcomings and not pretend to be something I'm not. I'm glad you dropped in to join me as I share all that's going on in my life, because I can tell you that life isn't always pretty!P.I.C.S. P.I.C.S. is a privately held independent company based

or Dystopia? Utopia or Dystopia? Stellaris demands a lot from the player and, at times, it is not always easy to achieve. As someone who has played the game for almost six months now, I can assure you that the game is playable. Unlike a lot of 2.5D space games it doesn't feel dated. Even if it's one of the most ambitious all time AI strategy games at least, it feels like the AIs still have a window of opportunity that will never go down. The game is not without its faults but the emphasis is mostly on the difficulty. If you are happy to buy your resources though, the game has enough depth and length for you to become very addicted to its play style. It definitely will not help you become better at the game but when playing against a bot, enjoying watching it mimic mistakes at the expense of its own, the fun factor is massive. What's something I like about it? I thought that the dark-populism and political comments were a bit heavy-handed and the game often veered into preachy territory but that's never stopped me like it has in a lot of games before. I do like the subtle "nudging" of the player that was required to achieve particular goals as you ran out of propellant or consumed your last fleet. Each time the base you started out with was overtaken by neighbouring factions you needed to dock your ships and press start in order to continue playing. A little animation re-enforced that you were now committing to becoming an organiser - no paying attention to what was going on would result in you being stalled and the inevitable message "disengage now or face losing everything". What's something I don't like about it? The amount of micromanagement this game expects from you is obnoxious. I have a problem with a lot of games that ask you to micromanage a part of the galaxy that at a certain point you have no tactical vision of it and regardless of the fact you did a lot of work on some factions, you have no idea who is attacking you. A lot of games either over simplify this step or assume you will already know who is attacking you which is almost never the case. My first visits to the galaxy at what could roughly be called the dawn of the faction dynamic in this game were probably 4 different times almost
