A study was made of the characteristics of the responses of electrically evoked electromyographic (E.E.M.) and vestibular (V.E.M.) potentials in the frog to mechanical stimulation of the ear pinna. The study, carried out on 14 frogs anesthetized with chloralose and urethan, had the purpose of examining the reflex action upon the vestibular nuclei due to electrical stimulation of the tectal plate. From the comparison of the action potentials and their components, it follows that the E.E
