Customer reviews: No reviews yet.The war for South Sudan is like the movie Groundhog Day for many, and playing the same day, over and over, as if waiting for a different result. Last night, another convoy of UN-accredited humanitarian aid trucks finally entered South Sudan after three weeks on the road from Uganda. It is desperately needed, but so far the food, water and medicine have not arrived. We pray that the aid finally reaches the people they are designed for, but that hope is quickly dashed. The root of the problem is President Salva Kiir and his offensive militias, which have been pillaging the aid and attacking the UN in Juba and other areas. During the night, the UN convoy was ambushed near Bor, in Jonglei State. Tanks fired at the trucks, and a former minister of the president was wounded. The next morning, we drove to the Nyakuron refugee camp, and reached Bor around midday. In Bor, there are three competing factions: Mr Kiir, rebels from the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), and the People's Protection Forces (PPF). The PPF was formed this year by one of Kiir's associates. Many of its leaders were former Kiirian officers who were expelled from the army in 2007. This is considered a coalition of criminals and former soldiers, of whom some support the SPLA, and some don't. They come from different clans. The fighting is continuing this morning, but aid access is still restricted. No journalists or aid workers are allowed to travel to Bor and Nyakuron. We managed to get to Bor by chartered plane from Juba, where I
