The campaign above was created by one of our users, and inspired by past campaigns about AutoCAD and other products. It had less than 10 different link clicks, which tells us this was a very well-performed campaign. Thanks to the campaign organizer for sharing!

First and second generation direct CEA agents: new concepts, developments, and toxicity. The original CEA agent was a polyclonal antibody, IMMU-SE, that could be radiolabeled with ¹³¹Iodine. Its primary value was as a radiodetector of inflammation in patients with lymphadenopathy. IMMU-SE proved to be a very effective drug, with minimal side effects. It also was used for radioimmunodetection of occult metastases in patients with carcinoma, and occasionally as an antitumor agent. All the non-human derived CEA antibodies were tested in animal models. These were of the monoclonal type. The anti-CEA murine antibody, BR96, a low molecular weight IgG1 antibody, was shown to be the most effective agent. Molecular studies suggested that the region of CEA involved in binding BR96 was the binding domain for internalization. This binding domain also may be important in the binding of CEA to tissue receptors. The large molecular weight, heavily glycosylated, IgG2 antibody, 4D5, was shown to be of some efficacy and could be more effectively radiolabeled. Trials of monoclonal antibodies against CEA in combination with whole body radiation have shown activity in animal models and may be the beginning of a new generation of second and third generation CEA agents.
