Microsoft Visual C 6 Redistributable 6.1 is a package that contains all five runtimes and libraries that are required for Visual Studio 2005, Visual Studio 2008, and Visual Studio 2010. These include Windows 2003, Windows XP, Windows 2000, Windows 7, and Windows 2008 R2. The Microsoft Visual C++ redistributable packages provide shared libraries, which are shared object files that contain functions that a program can use. A shared library in Windows provides a way to load multiple programs using the same functions. These functions are made available for program code to reference. Windows app samples are now available through GitHub. You can browse the code on GitHub, clone a personal copy of the repository from Git, or download a zipped archive of all the samples. We welcome feedback, so feel free to open an issue within the repository if you have a problem or question. These samples are designed to run on desktop, mobile, and future devices that support the Universal Windows Platform (UWP). Localize and localize is a time consuming process if there is a huge amount of strings so it was a good move to optimize it.

Now we have a nice visualization feature so that it is much easier to see how many strings we still need to localize. To develop a UWP application, you must use Visual Studio 2013.

An RTM version of Visual Studio 2013 can be downloaded directly from <http://go.microsoft.com/fwlink/?LinkId=267681>. This is an RTM version and is not a service pack. To download the needed components, log on to www.microsoft.com and search for Visual C++ Redistributable. Microsoft's Windows Store apps already require the Visual C++ Redistributable 2013 Runtime and it is required for Universal Windows Platform development. In addition, these versions of Visual C++ support native debugging on Windows 8.1 RTM.
