you can also cast the apple tv to a nearby apple tv or mac, which gets the full 1080p resolution and true surround sound of any other apple tv set-top box, but lacks a cellular modem. the apple tv can be used for web browsing, e-mail, and even to download apps for the ios mobile device. since the apple tv is not a true box, but rather a user-configurable component of the apple tv ecosystem, it is up to the user to download and install apps on the platform, and then use that to watch media on the apple tv. the apple tv is also compatible with the ios platform. apple has long supported apps for its itunes store. itunes match provides free high-quality song syncing for ios devices, allowing users to remotely store and play their music, movies, and tv shows on their mobile devices. the apple tv is apple's first foray into a more robust app ecosystem, where developers can provide new apple tv-compatible apps or update existing ones. the apple tv allows for a slightly more modern interface than the iphone and ipad, with the apple tv's home screen featuring all of the apps and games found on the iphone/ipod touch. when we browse for a movie, we are brought to a graphical menu of sorts, where we can browse and select our movies. we can also cast our mobile device to the apple tv, which serves as a remote control for the box. we can cast an entire movie, or just a single chapter. unlike some streaming movie services, the apple tv offers an unlimited number of streaming movies and television shows. instead of having to pay per movie or show, we pay a flat monthly fee, which is what netflix is doing and roku is planning on doing. we can also use the apple tv as a receiver for our other tv or device, like our apple tv set-top box.

it's funny, i'd see this news article and be like 'oh no, they're taking away the 'affordable' part of their hd offerings, what's next?' it then hit me, that they've always offered hd (and sd) rentals. i'd rent an hd movie, and then the next time i wanted to watch it, i'd go back to my regular, cheaper (in terms of speed and memory) sd version. and i'd find it hard to find a movie that required 3+ hours to download, but i didn't care, because i already had the hd version. but that's not to say that there aren't some interesting changes to this model, like the fact that they're asking for an extra $4 for the hd version (as opposed to the $3 you get with the sd version). there's also the fact that you can rent in hd, and then convert it to sd at a later date. the whole idea of this is that you're supposed to rent hd movies for $4, and then convert them to sd at a later date for $3 (or $2 if you already have the hd version). the rationale for this is that it's all about convenience, so that you don't have to do anything extra. one other thing that might bother you, is that they're asking for a $5 deposit for this service. as an indie filmmaker myself, it's one of the things that i'm afraid of, because if this service goes away, i'll have to invest in more expensive gear to deliver my own movies. but it's just a little extra on top of the $4. after watching the film on the apple tv, i connected my ipad to the apple tv. there was no noticeable delay in loading up the film, and it played in a crisp and clear form. on the ipad, the same film quality was still evident, even though i had started the download with itunes before loading the ipad movie app. 5ec8ef588b
